News

CROATIAN BORISLAV PAVLOVSKI RECEIVED THE "DRAGI" AWARD FOR THE BEST TRANSLATION OF A MACEDONIAN WORK

September 21, 2026 / 1 min read

Skopje, (SMART SDK.MK)

Croatian translator Borislav Pavlovski has won the international Dragi Award for the best translation of a literary work written in Macedonian. Pavlovski was awarded for his translation into Croatian of the novel "Bajazit and Olivera" by Dragi Mihajlovski, published this year by "TIM Press" from Zagreb.

"The translation of 'Bajazit and Olivera' is an example of a translation work in which fidelity to the original and creative freedom are in a carefully established balance. This is precisely where its greatest value lies: in the ability of Dragi Mihajlovski's work to speak with the same intensity, literary power and universality to a new reading audience," the publishing house "Antolog" announced.

Pavlovski, born in Bjelovar in 1950, is a Macedonian scholar, philologist, theater scholar, translator, university professor, and author. He graduated from the Faculty of Philosophy in Zagreb in South Slavic Languages and Literatures and Philosophy, where he later earned his master's and doctorate degrees.

From 1975 to 1978 he was a permanent correspondent for "Nova Makedonija" from Croatia. Since 1978 he has taught at the Department of Macedonian Language and Literature at the Faculty of Philosophy in Zagreb.

The "Dragi" award for the best translation into Macedonian was established in 2022, and the first honorary recognition was awarded to Dragi Mihajlovski (1951-2022), a writer, translator, essayist and university professor.

Borislav Pavlovski | reward | Darling Award

PREVIOUS NEWS

CROATIAN FILM DAYS AT THE CINEMA

NEXT NEWS

TEA TRAJKOVSKA RELEASES "CARAMEL", THE FIRST SONG FROM THE MINI-ALBUM INSPIRED BY THE ZODIAC SIGNS